often they have written about that subject, to make sure they are the right person to contact. You can find out where your competitors are being mentioned, and where you aren't — but you can also find out why they are being mentioned, so you can see whether you can replicate it. label: Search for messages that have a certain label has:attachment Search for messages that have an item attached has:youtube Search for a message containing a youtube video list: Search for all messages from a particular mailing list filename: Search for messages with a particular type of file attached, or the exact name of a file in:anywhere Includes all folders in your search, including spam and bin is:important Search for messages that have been marked as important is:snoozed Searches for messages that have been snoozed is:unread Searches for unread messages is:read Searches for read messages only older: Search for messages older than a certain date newer: Search for messages newer than a certain date is:chat Searches for messages from chat deliveredto: Search by email address for delivered messages category: Searches by messages based on category. This is as simple as performing the following query: site:domainname.com/blog (or whatever prefix you want to check under for that domain) This operator will show you the number of indexed pages for that section of the site, and you will be able to quickly tell if there are too many. Site:domainname.com -inurl:subdomainkeyword This search command will search the domain but use the '-' exclusion operator combined with the 'inurl:' operator to remove any URLs that mention a particular keyword. You could also do the same query without the site, perhaps even excluding that site, to see whether they have written anywhere else about the subject too. Instead of limiting yourself to the blog section of your site, you can check the whole domain. cache:domainname.com It will return a whole different display view displaying the most recent cache and stating when it was from. For content research, you may want to look for lists relating to a keyword to show how many listicles have been done, for instance. A normal search query of all 3 keywords can be quite restrictive as Google will greatly prioritize results that feature all three keywords. Someone people will flat out refuse your campaign simply because it is an infographic. For instance, if you are looking for a term that also has an association with a brand or sports team, you could remove searches that are related to those by completely excluding the words. The next simple step is to check any subdomains attached to the domain, whether you know about their existence or not. This particular search operator was technically deprecated in 2017, but occasionally it can work, so if you are struggling to find who your competitors are getting links from, it can be worth giving it a go. For example: Without the fantasy.premierleague subdomain, the number of indexed pages for the Premier League's site has drastically dropped. You may want to check other sites too. So: related:domainname.com Or, to find pages or subfolders similar to the one you are targeting: related:domainname.com/subfolder This will find a number of domains or pages that are similar to the site you've searched for. First of all, it is great for finding lists of resources where they'll potentially want to add a link to yours. For example: This shows that the EFL (English Football League) site has 9,300 indexed pages under its news section. Site:domainname.com Then Site:domainname.com keyword You can then see how often they mention that keyword. For example: Once you have cracked your technical audit and started working on your well-researched content strategy, you want to start bringing those links and brand mentions in. Follow the colon with the category name, i.e., category:primaryMail 82size:Messages larger than a certain size in bytesMail 83larger:Messages larger than a certain size in bytesMail 84smaller:Messages smaller than a certain size in bytesMail 85has:userlabelsSearch for messages that have custom user labelsMail 86has:nouserlabelsSearch for messages that have no custom user labelsMail Download the Google Search Operators Cheatsheet. All in all, Google's search operators are incredibly powerful tools. For instance: This found 33 pages related to the Premier League's website. This can help you understand why they are ranking for particular terms, or why they are seen as an authority in a space. Do this using the following: Site:domainname.com keyword Or, if you want to only search for a specific phrase: site: domainname.com "keywords" This can help you identify how many pages you may have competing for the same keywords, but also can be used to check how well your domain is viewed as an expert on a particular subject.
